5. Select your print options

Screen Readers

If students use a screen reader, they will be able to navigate the Aplia site in fall 2011, but they will not be able to access the Flash-based homework. In this case, students will most likely need a human assistant to complete the homework.

E-books

Flashpaper

You can use your browser's zooming feature to see a larger version of the textbook. However, students using a screen reader will not be able to access the online textbook.

Printing in Flashpaper

1. Log in to your student account
2. Select the View table of contents link from the homepage
3. Select the chapter you want to print (a new window will open)
4. Select the printer icon in the upper-right corner of the new window
5. Select your print options

ApliaText

This e-book is displayed using HTML, with a separate HTML page for each section in the chapter, making it accessible to students using a screen reader. However, each screen reader is different, so if there are issues, the Aplia Support Team will need to know what operating system, browser, and screen reader the student is using.

Printing in ApliaText

1. Log in to your student account
2. Select the View table of contents link from the homepage
3. Select the chapter you want to print (a new window will open)
4. Select the Print this Chapter link at the top of the page
5. Select your print options

Videos

All videos in Aplia (both in ApliaText and the homework) are closed captioned.

Other Resources

If a student would benefit from an alternative to either the online or physical textbook, your school's Disability Support Services official may request the textbook in electronic form. You can find details on the Cengage Learning site at <http://www.cengage.com/permissions/accessibility>.
